A PORTRAIT OF HISTORIC Gadsden County MAY 10–JULY 6, 2013

Historic Gadsden County

Gadsden County was created in 1823, and today is known for stories of its famous shade tobacco industry and the legendary Coca-Cola connection. “A Portrait of Historic Gadsden County” is an opportunity to bring together some of these stories with new artwork, by artists who are inspired by Gadsden County, and art and artifacts borrowed from local residents who have saved some of the county’s rich history. We hope visitors will enjoy this snapshot of historic Gadsden County, share stories and memories of its past, and gain appreciation for the unique place we call “home.”

Pottery is often considered both art and craft, because it is created for a purpose, but often contains delicate details and designs that make it art.

This bowl found in Gadsden County comes from 900-1500 CE Apalachee Native Americans. In their pottery, they used stamping and engraving techniques. The craftsperson that made this bowl used incising and punctuating to create the beautiful circular design, which is typical of the pottery created by Native Americans living in this area from 800-1500 CE.

Map of Gadsden County's original borders

When settlers began building up Gadsden County in the 1800s, many brought with them their eye for beautiful architecture. One such style was the Greek Revival, a style that resembles the classical temples of Greece.

This mantel once graced the Dr. J. M. W. Davidson's home in downtown Quincy. Now demolished, the home's mantel is a reminder of the architectural gems that are were found across Gadsden County. The Greek Revival style features raised pediments and columns or pilasters.
